THE WELL-KNOWN BUILDER, IS STILL IN THE FIELD AS A CONtractor, and is now better prepared to do any and all kinds of work appertaining to contracting or any other class of work belonging to his trade, in the same good and workmanlike manner as heretofore; having curtailed my shop expenses and still retain plenty of room to do any and all kinds of work appertaining to the building trade that may be entrusted to my care. I am enabled to do the same at very low rates, to suit the extremely dull times, and at the same time bearing in mind that what is worth doing at all is worth doing well. Thanking the public for past favors, I remain respectfully yours,

Called Fire Proof Buildings Impart pecial Grounds for Fear. If there is any one thing that dis-heartens a fireman more than another, it is to be told that a building on which he is at work is a modern fire proof structure. The speaker was an old fireman, who is now serving on the insurance patrol, and he had some reasons to back up this somewhat startling asser-

It may sound strange to hear of a It may sound strange to hear of a fireman's being at work on a "fire proof" building, but fires in so called fire proof buildings are by no means unusual, and everybody knows that some of these fires are the very ones that result in frightful loss of life. Their size and height doubtless has much to do with this, while a sense of fancied security frequently leads to fancied security frequently leads to gross carelessness on the part of the

But while it is only these occasional holocausts that attract the attention of the general public, firemen have to risk life and limb almost daily, and the maiming of a man for the rest of his days is dismissed with the merest mention in the newspapers. It is the unseen danger of an ordinary fire that men fear, rather than the exciting emergencies of a great conflagration, and it is because some of these modern structures are so prolific in these unseen dangers that they are so these unseen dangers that they are so much dreaded. A peculiarly dangerous feature in the construction of many large busi-ness buildings is the use of iron pil-lars, which frequently rise in series one above the other from foundation to roof. These are especially common in wholesale establishments covering several ordinary lots, and sometimes take the place of inside walls altogether. Of course that is all right several ordinary lots, and sometimes take the place of inside walls altogether. Of course that is all right where the floors are of iron, cement and tiling, but you won't find such floors except in a few large office or sank buildings.

The mere fact that you see iron floor beams used in the construction is no radication that it will be really fire proof. Unless the floors are filled in with some non-combustible material, the iron beams are manifestly not of the slightest importance in preventing the passage of the fire, while the iron pillars are a source of great and positive danger. The trouble with them is that just as soon as a hot blast of flame strikes them they expand undown the enture structure. "Anu it is all down so quickly that the poor fireman has no warning, and precious little chance to get out.

The extensive use of iron in such buildings at present is in fact a source of danger all around. Even when pillars are not used, inside walls are supposed to be strengthened at every story with iron braces. In this case the effect is similar, and as soon as the heat has warped the braces out of shape, the whole interior is liable to fall unexpectedly.

As regards pillars, good solid ones of hard wood are much better than iron. They will burn, of course, but it takes a long time to burn three or four inches right into hard wood, and so long as the core remains solid, the floors are safe. That gives the firemen a chance to work, and unless the place is otherwise a regular tinder box, a well equipped fire department will save the building.

The massive office buildings now so common in lower Broadway and in Nassau and Wall streets, are really fire proof, and although there will sometimes be a mighty hot fire among the furniture in a particular office or suite of rooms, it can never extend from floor to floor.

Another very deceptive style of building is the iron front, of which so

Another very deceptive style of building is the iron front, of which so many were put up fifteen years or so ago. A peculiar danger of these is that in falling the front does not come down piecemeal, but falls like a sheet of solid metal. Half a dozen reporters had a somewhat narrow escape a year and a half ago at that big million dollar fire on Broadway, near Prince street, from this. The iron front of one of these buildings fell over as straight as a pole, without either bending or breaking, until it struck the ground and the building on the other side of the street. from floor to floor.

side of the street. The reporters were standing on the opposite sidewalk, only about twenty feet to one side, and all the telegraph wires over there were brought down Insurance effected upon every description of on their heads. Some of them had their hats badly battered, and their ears or noses scratched.-New York

W. J. Norris, a prominent merchant of our town, thought to back down one of our young ladies would be a nice thing, so made her the following proposition recently: That if she would take a little ten cent parasol, which is about the size of a palmetto fan, hoist it and walk up Main street a certain distance and return, carrying it over her all the way, that he would reward her with a silk umbrella. She at first hesitated, but, after making numerous futile at-tempts, finally made off with the little mushroom shaped concern held aloft over her graceful form. Sho re-turned in a few minutes bearing a note with the signatures of a number of the clerks attached stating that she had passed by or arrived at their stores with the parasol in position. Mr. Norris gracefully turned over the umbrella to its rightful owner, and the young lady departed with two umbrellas instead of one. Mr. Norris will hardly make another such offer soon. - Warrenton (Ga.) Clipper.

She Won the Umbrella
